Many visitors to the Maltese islands find themselves paying a visit to Mdina and Rabat sooner or later. Set amongst interesting countryside, this area is ideal for walks. The route here is interesting as it goes through the medieval heart of Mdina, followed by the cottage of Rabat, Siggiewi and ends on the Dingli Cliffs.

This route can be followed on foot or on bike.

The walk starts near the Domus Romana, one of the most important Roman sites that has survived in Malta, and which rises more than 500 feet above sea level. From here are views across the city, one of which is the large open space in front of the archeological remains, where today there is a park. In fact, this is where Mdina city and residential quarters have actually been identified, many remains are digging back to the Classical period. Our walk takes a left for going through a tunnel beneath the road, where you will find yourself in the recently renovated district of the old medieval city of Mdina. The secondary gate of Mdina is known as Green Gate, giving a lovely place to where a church community used to live.

The narrow road opposite the entrance passes by N. Nicolaus. At the end is the earliest documented reference to a church dedicated to St. Stephen, built back in the 14th century. The church is well maintained throughout the centuries, until it was built in the 17th century. This church is considered one of the best preserved churches of Malta. Keep on walking along the street, you will find a narrow window glass, look up, turn into Magister Street, and notice the number of stores that were built in the 18th century. The windows are adorned with decorative iron and stone works. Look upwards to the street, you will notice a sign on the right end, and further horizontally half-moon shape window of very small size, decorated with iron and sand blasted features.

When walking, the path you have just passed by is a 17th century building, known as C. Calvia, which contains several elements. This was the pax house on the first floor with a bedroom and different. Some pipes and other things were used as clamps on the walls, this was the last destination which was the last place where the curious community used to live.

The narrow road opposite the entrance passes by N. Nicolaus, at the end is the earliest documented reference to a church dedicated to St. Stephen, built back in the 14th century. The church is well maintained throughout the centuries, until it was built in the 17th century. This church is considered one of the best preserved churches of Malta. Keep on walking along the street, you will find a narrow window glass, look up, turn into Magister Street, and notice the number of stores that were built in the 18th century. The windows are adorned with decorative iron and stone works. Look upwards to the street, you will notice a sign on the right end, and further horizontally half-moon shape window of very small size, decorated with iron and sand blasted features.

This walk consists of a 17th century building, known as C. Calvia, which contains several elements. This was the pax house on the first floor with a bedroom and different. Some pipes and other things were used as clamps on the walls, this was the last destination which was the last place where the curious community used to live.

The narrow road opposite the entrance passes by N. Nicolaus, at the end is the earliest documented reference to a church dedicated to St. Stephen, built back in the 14th century. The church is well maintained throughout the centuries, until it was built in the 17th century. This church is considered one of the best preserved churches of Malta. Keep on walking along the street, you will find a narrow window glass, look up, turn into Magister Street, and notice the number of stores that were built in the 18th century. The windows are adorned with decorative iron and stone works. Look upwards to the street, you will notice a sign on the right end, and further horizontally half-moon shape window of very small size, decorated with iron and sand blasted features.

The narrow road opposite the entrance passes by N. Nicolaus, at the end is the earliest documented reference to a church dedicated to St. Stephen, built back in the 14th century. The church is well maintained throughout the centuries, until it was built in the 17th century. This church is considered one of the best preserved churches of Malta. Keep on walking along the street, you will find a narrow window glass, look up, turn into Magister Street, and notice the number of stores that were built in the 18th century. The windows are adorned with decorative iron and stone works. Look upwards to the street, you will notice a sign on the right end, and further horizontally half-moon shape window of very small size, decorated with iron and sand blasted features.

The narrow road opposite the entrance passes by N. Nicolaus, at the end is the earliest documented reference to a church dedicated to St. Stephen, built back in the 14th century. The church is well maintained throughout the centuries, until it was built in the 17th century. This church is considered one of the best preserved churches of Malta. Keep on walking along the street, you will find a narrow window glass, look up, turn into Magister Street, and notice the number of stores that were built in the 18th century. The windows are adorned with decorative iron and stone works. Look upwards to the street, you will notice a sign on the right end, and further horizontally half-moon shape window of very small size, decorated with iron and sand blasted features.

The narrow road opposite the entrance passes by N. Nicolaus, at the end is the earliest documented reference to a church dedicated to St. Stephen, built back in the 14th century. The church is well maintained throughout the centuries, until it was built in the 17th century. This church is considered one of the best preserved churches of Malta. Keep on walking along the street, you will find a narrow window glass, look up, turn into Magister Street, and notice the number of stores that were built in the 18th century. The windows are adorned with decorative iron and stone works. Look upwards to the street, you will notice a sign on the right end, and further horizontally half-moon shape window of very small size, decorated with iron and sand blasted features.

The narrow road opposite the entrance passes by N. Nicolaus, at the end is the earliest documented reference to a church dedicated to St. Stephen, built back in the 14th century. The church is well maintained throughout the centuries, until it was built in the 17th century. This church is considered one of the best preserved churches of Malta. Keep on walking along the street, you will find a narrow window glass, look up, turn into Magister Street, and notice the number of stores that were built in the 18th century. The windows are adorned with decorative iron and stone works. Look upwards to the street, you will notice a sign on the right end, and further horizontally half-moon shape window of very small size, decorated with iron and sand blasted features.

The narrow road opposite the entrance passes by N. Nicolaus, at the end is the earliest documented reference to a church dedicated to St. Stephen, built back in the 14th century. The church is well maintained throughout the centuries, until it was built in the 17th century. This church is considered one of the best preserved churches of Malta. Keep on walking along the street, you will find a narrow window glass, look up, turn into Magister Street, and notice the number of stores that were built in the 18th century. The windows are adorned with decorative iron and stone works. Look upwards to the street, you will notice a sign on the right end, and further horizontally half-moon shape window of very small size, decorated with iron and sand blasted features.

The narrow road opposite the entrance passes by N. Nicolaus, at the end is the earliest documented reference to a church dedicated to St. Stephen, built back in the 14th century. The church is well maintained throughout the centuries, until it was built in the 17th century. This church is considered one of the best preserved churches of Malta. Keep on walking along the street, you will find a narrow window glass, look up, turn into Magister Street, and notice the number of stores that were built in the 18th century. The windows are adorned with decorative iron and stone works. Look upwards to the street, you will notice a sign on the right end, and further horizontally half-moon shape window of very small size, decorated with iron and sand blasted features.

The narrow road opposite the entrance passes by N. Nicolaus, at the end is the earliest documented reference to a church dedicated to St. Stephen, built back in the 14th century. The church is well maintained throughout the centuries, until it was built in the 17th century. This church is considered one of the best preserved churches of Malta. Keep on walking along the street, you will find a narrow window glass, look up, turn into Magister Street, and notice the number of stores that were built in the 18th century. The windows are adorned with decorative iron and stone works. Look upwards to the street, you will notice a sign on the right end, and further horizontally half-moon shape window of very small size, decorated with iron and sand blasted features.

The narrow road opposite the entrance passes by N. Nicolaus, at the end is the earliest documented reference to a church dedicated to St. Stephen, built back in the 14th century. The church is well maintained throughout the centuries, until it was built in the 17th century. This church is considered one of the best preserved churches of Malta. Keep on walking along the street, you will find a narrow window glass, look up, turn into Magister Street, and notice the number of stores that were built in the 18th century. The windows are adorned with decorative iron and stone works. Look upwards to the street, you will notice a sign on the right end, and further horizontally half-moon shape window of very small size, decorated with iron and sand blasted features.

The narrow road opposite the entrance passes by N. Nicolaus, at the end is the earliest documented reference to a church dedicated to St. Stephen, built back in the 14th century. The church is well maintained throughout the centuries, until it was built in the 17th century. This church is considered one of the best preserved churches of Malta. Keep on walking along the street, you will find a narrow window glass, look up, turn into Magister Street, and notice the number of stores that were built in the 18th century. The windows are adorned with decorative iron and stone works. Look upwards to the street, you will notice a sign on the right end, and further horizontally half-moon shape window of very small size, decorated with iron and sand blasted features.

The narrow road opposite the entrance passes by N. Nicolaus, at the end is the earliest documented reference to a church dedicated to St. Stephen, built back in the 14th century. The church is well maintained throughout the centuries, until it was built in the 17th century. This church is considered one of the best preserved churches of Malta. Keep on walking along the street, you will find a narrow window glass, look up, turn into Magister Street, and notice the number of stores that were built in the 18th century. The windows are adorned with decorative iron and stone works. Look upwards to the street, you will notice a sign on the right end, and further horizontally half-moon shape window of very small size, decorated with iron and sand blasted features.

The narrow road opposite the entrance passes by N. Nicolaus, at the end is the earliest documented reference to a church dedicated to St. Stephen, built back in the 14th century. The church is well maintained throughout the centuries, until it was built in the 17th century. This church is considered one of the best preserved churches of Malta. Keep on walking along the street, you will find a narrow window glass, look up, turn into Magister Street, and notice the number of stores that were built in the 18th century. The windows are adorned with decorative iron and stone works. Look upwards to the street, you will notice a sign on the right end, and further horizontally half-moon shape window of very small size, decorated with iron and sand blasted features.

The narrow road opposite the entrance passes by N. Nicolaus, at the end is the earliest documented reference to a church dedicated to St. Stephen, built back in the 14th century. The church is well maintained throughout the centuries, until it was built in the 17th century. This church is considered one of the best preserved churches of Malta. Keep on walking along the street, you will find a narrow window glass, look up, turn into Magister Street, and notice the number of stores that were built in the 18th century. The windows are adorned with decorative iron and stone works. Look upwards to the street, you will notice a sign on the right end, and further horizontally half-moon shape window of very small size, decorated with iron and sand blasted features.